

Essential and Non Essential Relative Clauses-with translation

ENGLISH

Relative clauses are a type of dependent clause that provide additional information about a noun or pronoun in a sentence. They are usually introduced by relative pronouns or relative adverbs.

Now, let's look at the two types of relative clauses: essential and non-essential.

1. Essential Relative Clauses:

An essential relative clause, also known as a restrictive relative clause, provides necessary information that is essential to understanding the meaning of the sentence. If you remove an essential relative clause, the meaning of the sentence changes significantly. Essential relative clauses are not set off by commas.

Example:

- The book that I bought yesterday is very interesting.
In this sentence, the essential relative clause "that I bought yesterday" is necessary to identify which book is being referred to. Without this clause, the sentence would simply state, "The book is very interesting," which lacks specific information.

1. Non-Essential Relative Clauses:

A non-essential relative clause, also known as a non-restrictive relative clause, provides additional, non-essential information about a noun or pronoun. It adds extra details but can be removed without changing the overall meaning of the sentence. Non-essential relative clauses are set off by commas.

Example:

- John's sister, who is a doctor, lives in New York.
In this sentence, the non-essential relative clause "who is a doctor" adds extra information about John's sister. However, if we remove this clause, the core meaning of the sentence remains intact: "John's sister lives in New York."

To summarize, essential relative clauses are necessary for understanding the meaning of a sentence and are not set off by commas. Non-essential relative clauses provide additional, non-essential information and are set off by commas.

SPANISH

Las oraciones de relativo son un tipo de cláusulas subordinadas que proporcionan información adicional sobre un sustantivo o pronombre en una oración. Por lo general, se introducen con pronombres relativos o adverbios relativos.

Ahora, veamos los dos tipos de oraciones de relativo: cláusulas de relativo esenciales y no esenciales.

1. Cláusulas de Relativo Esenciales:

Una cláusula de relativo esencial, también conocida como cláusula restrictiva de relativo, proporciona información necesaria que es esencial para comprender el significado de la oración. Si se elimina una cláusula de relativo esencial, el significado de la oración cambia significativamente. Las cláusulas de relativo esenciales no se separan con comas.

Ejemplo:

- The book that I bought yesterday is very interesting. (El libro que compré ayer es muy interesante)
En esta oración, la cláusula de relativo esencial "that I bought yesterday" es necesaria para identificar a qué libro se hace referencia. Sin esta cláusula, la oración simplemente diría: "The book is very interesting" (El libro es muy interesante), lo cual carece de información específica.

1. Cláusulas de Relativo No Esenciales:

Una cláusula de relativo no esencial, también conocida como cláusula no restrictiva de relativo, proporciona información adicional no esencial sobre un sustantivo o pronombre. Ag
